

Chumash or Spanish?

The Chumash people have lived in the Santa Barbara area for more than 14,000 years, in villages along the coast and in inland valleys. Traditionally hunters and gatherers, they existed primarily on acorns, small game, fish, and other ocean life.

When Juan Rodríguez Cabrillo of Spain arrived by ship in 1542 to claim this area for the Spanish king, the Chumash paddled out to meet his crew. In April 1782 soldiers and their families traveled overland from the Sonora area of New Spain (Mexico) to settle Santa Barbara. Presidios and missions were the two primary institutions utilized by Spain to defend, colonize, and Christianize Alta California. Between 1769 and 1824, four presidios and twenty-one missions were established in Alta or Upper California.

Life changed a great deal for the Chumash in the Santa Barbara area with the arrival of the Spanish settlers who introduced many new things to the natives. Instructions:
